I support the protection of net neutrality. The internet is one of the most important resources of the modern world, and allowing any outside entity to restrict usage in any way would be the modern equivalent of burning the Library of Alexandria. Vast amounts of knowledge and access to information will be lost, and the far reaching consequences of this will set back mankind as a whole. The internet should continue to be a public, open domain for the sharing of ideas and information unencumbered by the greed and restrictions of service providers. History will prove that net neutrality is essential, one way or another. The fact that removing these freedoms are even a consideration is an insult to the population of the United States and everything our country stands for. Keep the internet open and accessible for everyone!
